IV. Read the following passage and answer the questions set on it : (1 × 10 = 10)

Lies can be divided into two types : white lies and black lies. A black lie is a statement we make that we know is false. A white lie is a statement we make that is not in itself false but leaves out a significant part of the truth. A fact that a lie is white does not in itself make it less of a lie or any more excusable. White lies may be every bit as destructive as black ones. A government that withholds essential information from its people by censorship is no more democratic than one that speaks falsely. The woman who conveniently forgets to mention that she has used up all the money in the family bank account is no less guilty than if she had lied directly. Indeed because it may seem less reprehensible, the withholding of essential information is the most common form of lying and because it may be more difficult to detect and confront it is often even more pernicious than black lies. Yet White lies are considered socially acceptable in many relationships because it is said when 'we don't want to hurt people's feelings.' However we must bemoan the fact that lying-be it black or white leads to a superficial and hypocritical society.

1. What are the two types of lies?
2. How does the author define a white lie?
3. According to the author what is common to both types of lies?
4. Why are white lies more pernicious than black lies?
